Social work is a major for students who desire to work with individuals, families, groups, organizations, and communities. Generalist social work practitioners pursue career opportunities in various public and private settings including school systems, child welfare, healthcare, mental health, addictions, domestic violence, criminal justice, and gerontology. Many social work graduates wishing to practice as clinical therapists go on to pursue a master's degree in social work (MSW). Graduates from social work programs accredited by the Council on Social Work Education, like Warner University, are eligible to enter graduate school with “advanced standing”, shortening the course of study for the MSW by as much as one year.
